

Church is...

In the New Testament, we find a number of metaphors for Christ's church, each intended to highlight a certain facet of the nature of who we are. The church is a family, of brothers and sisters united with one name (Christian) and one blood (Christ's).

The church is a body, made up of what every joint supplies under the Head, our Lord Jesus. The church is a building, a temple made up of spiritual bricks into a dwelling place of the Lord.

Though these each differ in certain ways, one thing all three have in common is a need for every part. A family that loses a brother or sister will always feel a sense of incompleteness. A body missing a member will be slowed in its function in some way. A building that does not have all of its bricks intact will be weaker in some way.

That's why the church needs every one of us to show up, commit, and serve to be all she can be! It is true that a perfect, all-knowing God has no need for anything or anyone. But He has designed the church in such a way that the stronger and more dedicated each part is in taking their role, the better it is for both the church and the lost around us.

Can He count on you?
